

Young Adults in the Space Age

By

Frank Danger

(16,700 Words)

Table of Contents

Contents

Table of Contents	2
Introduction	3
The Difference between Childhood and Young Adulthood	4
Academic Pressures and Challenge Development in Young Adulthood	5
Negative Peer Pressure and Young Adults	6
Positive Peer Pressure and Young Adults	8
Pre-Engagement Issues and Young Adults	10
Engagement Issues in Young Adults	13
Family Planning Issues	13
Career Development Issues	16
Seeking Counseling	18
Marriage Issues in Young Adults	19
Parental Issues for Young Adults	22
The Baby Development Syndrome	22
The Social Development Syndrome	24
Issues between Young Adults and God	27
How Young Adults Deal with Their Sexual Behaviors	27
Substance Abuse Problems	28
Agnosticism	29
Academic Behaviors	30
Work Ethics	31
Final Statement	32

Introduction

We must understand the complex issues that our young adults face for several reasons. First, we want them to make constructive and intelligent decisions about substance abuse issues. Secondly, we must try to help them through early crisis intervention programs when they fall prey to criminal activity and to substance abuse. Thirdly, we must develop family planning studies that will help us to forewarn our young adults about the dangers that await them if they engage in high-risk sexual behaviors. Young adults can be more naïve than adults can. They are more likely to make errors in judgement that can lead to serious consequences. Adults have to understand young-adult issues in order to maximize the probability that our young adults will not ruin their lives through misjudgment and the idea that they can go unpunished for conspiring to hurt themselves and to hurt others.

We must understand everything that can go wrong for our young adults during young adulthood. That includes understanding family-planning issues, substance abuse issues, academic issues, and peer pressure issues. We must develop studies and other ways to try to investigate what actually can go wrong with our young adults during young adulthood. That is the first step before we can develop intervention programs to try to save our young adults' lives when they drift into very serious trouble. That trouble can destroy their lives if we cannot intervene in their lives to try to save them.

We can develop coping strategies that can help us to help our young adults to deal with their life-threatening stressors. Family Planning counseling can help them to understand the benefits and risks of under aged sexual activity. Psychiatric treatment and psychological counseling can help them to understand that they cannot want to be a threat to themselves and a threat to others. Criminal justice counseling can help our young adults to understand the dangers of engaging in criminal activity. Religious awareness programs can help our young adults to learn the difference between right and wrong by teaching them to try to find God.

Education should not be just about learning math, reading, science, and language arts. Education should be about teaching our young adults about the difference between right and wrong. We have to teach them what they need to know in order to avoid committing crimes, abusing controlled substances, avoiding engaging in high-risk sexual behaviors, and dealing with negative peer pressure in a constructive manner.

Our young adults are Part of God. God and the Holy Spirit watch over our young adults. God does not want to lose any of our young adults to incarceration or to a life of substance abuse. God wants all young adults to remain a part of His Human Creation. God wants all of us to participate in the conception and the development of human life. Our young adults owe that goal to God. Young adults need to understand the benefits of working with God and a spouse to conceive and to develop new human lives.

All of this should start in our education as young adults. We should understand that young adulthood is a critical time in everyone's lives. We have to make it as productive as possible.

The Difference between Childhood and Young Adulthood

We should examine the differences between childhood and young adulthood. There are different types of stressors that affect both children and young adults. There are also stressors that are unique to both children and young adults.

A child does not have the desire or capability to work with a member of the opposite gender to work with God to conceive a human life. Young adults try to develop the capability to conceive and to develop human life with a member of the opposite gender. That does not necessarily mean that they are capable of withstanding the stresses of a pregnancy and the development of a new human life.

Young adult women can become pregnant. However, it is to their benefit to wait until they become adults before they try to experiment with parenthood. The responsibilities of parenthood and marriage can be too stressful for a young adult woman.

A child does not understand the intimacy between a man and a woman that contributes to the process of the conception of a human life. Young adults begin to understand how sexual intimacy works. They start to understand how to work with a partner of the opposite gender to work with God to conceive a human life through sexual intimacy. A child becomes a young adult at this point when the child begins to understand that he or she has the ability to work with a partner of the opposite gender to conceive a human life by working with God through intimacy.

Female children have no menstrual cycles. Therefore, young girls cannot do not have the ability to become pregnant once every month. Young adult females have a menstrual cycle on a monthly basis. They have the potential to become pregnant once a month. That is not to say that they can tolerate a pregnancy if they are students in a grammar school, middle school, high school, and/or college. Young adult boys and girls have to understand the mechanism of the menstrual cycle before they make any decisions about engaging in premarital sexual activity.

Young adult boys begin to develop the capacity to impregnate a member of the opposite gender. Young adult boys begin to produce semen, which is the seed of the conception of human life. Young adult boys can have many misconceptions about how to deal with issues that involve sexual activity without the intent to conceive a human life.

Both young adult boys and young adult girls can succumb to raging hormones. This may produce unprovoked sexual arousal in both young-adult boys and young-adult girls. The frustration that comes from unprovoked arousals and from raging hormones may lead them seriously to consider unprotected sexual activity to be a solution to their frustration and suffering. Curiosity about sexual activity may also play a role in convincing our kids that it is fine to engage in unprotected and high-risk sexual behaviors.

Young-adulthood is much different from childhood. However, the transition from child to young adult can take time. It can be successful. It can also be catastrophic. Our parents and educators should intervene in the lives of our young adults to make sure that this transition is productive.

Academic Pressures and Challenge Development in Young Adulthood

Many pressures can lead a young-adult student to encounter severe stress in their studies. Students can deal with many pressures that can adversely affect their development as students.

Raging hormones can be a distraction from a student's ability to concentrate in school. Raging hormones can put pressure on the student to engage in relationship with a person of the opposite gender with the intent to engage in sexual activity without the intent to conceive a human life. Spontaneous and unplanned sexual activity can lead to an unplanned teenage pregnancy or a college undergraduate teenage pregnancy.

Some students will try to bridge the gap between substandard academic performance and lack of interest in academic achievement by involving themselves in sports activities. They sometimes can feel that they will achieve higher grades by functioning as student athletes without having to put in the extra effort to study and to achieve higher levels of academic success.

Some students that have fallen behind academically because of a behavioral disorder might not be able to find behavioral medical treatment from psychiatrists and psychotherapists. Their psychiatric disorders can lead them to do things that are both antisocial and illegal. Young adults that cannot find treatment for their behavioral or psychiatric disorders can face failures in both their academic lives as well as in their personal lives. It is very important to have support services to be available to those students who need psychiatric medical treatment the most.

Young adults may see little or no motivation to proceed with their educations. This can happen for several reasons. They may come from a family whose members have substance abuse problems and/or other problems with the criminal justice system. The students may be malnourished. The students might be distracted from their studies by a romantic relationship. Students might see a future in working for gangs and organized crime. Students may not have the money to pursue an education after high school. We must give our young adults incentives to pursue their educations.

Discouraged students may turn to drug-dealing, substance abuse, and gang involvement to survive. They may seek careers as criminals that deal drugs and that work under-the-table (off the books) for organized crime organizations and for gangs. These types of students have lost their motivations to succeed because they do not know what they have to gain by pursuing an education. We must give high-risk young adults the motivation to achieve success in education.

Young adults may face severe job-performance problems during their schooling and after graduation for high school and college. Peer pressures and behavioral problems from the students' school years may lead to very difficult problems that young adults face in performing in jobs. It is one thing to perform in the classroom. It is another thing to perform in a job. It is important that schools should prepare students to perform in their jobs after graduation.

A caste-system that puts elite young-adult students on a level above everyone else hurts the egos and the self-respect of all of our young –adult students. God has created all of us to be equal to one another in His image and likeness. We must all understand that.

Negative Peer Pressure and Young Adults

All young adults feel the need to do whatever it takes to convince their peer groups to accept them. Different peer groups in our schools have different requirements that our young adults need to meet in order to achieve acceptance.

Negative Peer Pressure happens when our peers encourage us to engage in behaviors that represent a threat to ourselves and/or a threat to others. These behaviors injure ourselves and injure others.

Our young adult peers can sometimes require us to abuse controlled substances in order for the members to decide to accept the prospective applicant into their peer group. Drinking is the substance that is the most attractive to our young adults for abuse and consumption. That is true for our high school students and our college students. They can abuse alcohol in either dorms, fraternities and/or sororities, and at parties. There is no way to tell how many of our students alcoholics become.

Sometimes, grammar school, high school, and college students like to abuse tobacco. Some peer groups encourage interested students to smoke tobacco as a way to negotiate with the peer group for acceptance. There is no discussion about the eventual consequences of smoking tobacco when our young adults are convinced to abuse tobacco. Some peer groups like to accept young adults that smoke tobacco.

Young adults who have finished trying with their educations can feel peer pressure on the streets to join gangs and to cooperate with drug dealers. They can try to join peer groups that require their members to use illegal street drugs at parties, homes, and at social events. This type of negative peer pressure usually leads a young adult to rely on a life of crime for survival. Jail time will follow and will happen repeatedly unless the young adult can detach himself or herself from these types of harmful peer groups.

Young adults in grammar schools and high schools need criminal justice training. They need mentors that work for local, state, and federal law enforcement agencies to teach them about the dangers that are associated with alcohol, tobacco, illegal street drugs, weapons, and firearms. The goal of law enforcement is to keep our kids and young adults out of incarceration and out of prison. The first step toward achieving that goal is to work with our students by giving them criminal justice training. This will help them to understand what the laws are and what the consequences are if they proceed to try to break the law. This would benefit our high-risk students by giving them a chance to think a few times before committing a crime.

Negative peer pressure can encourage young adults to be fiancés in an engagement to be married. This type of peer pressure can also lead them to become sexually active with members of the opposite gender. This type of peer pressure can encourage the abuse of contraception (birth control), attempts at consummation, and repeated acts of unprotected sexual activity. The couple can also engage in sexual activity with birth-control methods that can fail. Engaging in repeated acts of sexual activity without the intent to conceive can cause numerous psychiatric problems for a young adult woman. It can also lead to an unplanned pregnancy and to the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases. An the members of an engaged couple have to decide whether they have much to gain from engaging in sexual activity without the intent to conceive a human life before they are officially married.

Many of the members of our peer groups ignore God. They encourage their members to ignore God through negative peer pressure. They do not pray to God. They do not think about God. They go through life without understanding that we all answer to God. This is what we call agnosticism. This may be more of a problem for our young adults in public grammar schools, public middle schools, and public high schools. Parochial schools and other religious schools give our children and young adults a better idea about why they should learn about God and why they should worship God. Peer groups that discourage the pursuit of one's relationship with God seek to injure our relationships with God and our ability to exist in his universe.

Some peer groups have a fascination with weapons. Some members of peer groups encourage their members to use weapons as a condition of acceptance into the peer group. This is definitely negative peer pressure. We can only use weapons for injuring oneself or of injuring others. Weapons have no place in the hands of our young adults unless they are training to join law enforcement agencies or the military. This type of negative peer pressure is so dangerous that it can cause a member of this type of peer group to die, to cause someone else to die, and/or to spend any or all of his or her of the rest of their lives in prison. We need to warn our young adults about the dangers of using firearms as part of society. Guns can only get you jail time.

Negative peer pressure can lead domestic instability and to domestic violence. Our young adult's peers can convince them to use drugs, to work under-the-table, to drink, to smoke, and to engage in gang-related activities. A young adult's family might object to this type of lifestyle. Conflicts could erupt between the young adult's girlfriend, boyfriend, fiancé, spouse, or immediate family members. The types of domestic disputes can lead to arrests for domestic violence and for domestic disturbances. Negative peer pressure can cause severe instability and conflict in a young adult's home.

Young adults that do not know any better than to agree to the terms and conditions of gangs and other destructive peer groups will eventually face law enforcement agencies and lawyers. Law enforcement will notice their illegal activities. Law enforcement officers will detect that the young adult's peers are destructive to themselves and to others. A lawyer's job is to help a young adult that law enforcement has charged in the commission of a crime or crimes to stay out of prison and to agree never to commit the crime again. The criminal justice system has nothing to gain by incarcerating young adults that do not know any better than to try to gain acceptance into a peer group by committing crimes, hurting oneself, hurting others, and/or using illegal controlled substances. The criminal justice system has more to gain by reforming our young adults in order to return them to society as law-abiding citizens of God's Creation and Nation of Humanity.

Our law enforcement agencies and officers should build strong relationships with our young adults from the time that they are in grammar school. We need to help them to understand the difference between right and wrong. We need to help them to understand how to identify and to detect negative peer pressure. Next, we have to teach them how to reject negative peer pressure. They should reject peer pressure even if it means that a peer group will reject them.

Our young adults have to understand that we all answer to God. They must understand that we are all part of God. God wants us to stay away from harmful peer groups that ask us to hurt ourselves and to hurt others. God wants us to obey the Laws of God and the laws of our society. God wants us to know the difference between right and wrong and to live our lives as free human beings.

Positive Peer Pressure and Young Adults

Our young adults are fortunate when peer groups that engage in constructive activities and that exercise intelligent and productive thinking and behaviors. It is so important for our young adults to find a network of friends that will lead them to a future relationship with a prospective future spouse. Positive peer pressure in our schools contributes to the healthy and safe maturation of young adults in our grammar schools, middle schools, high schools, colleges, and universities. God guides all of us when we are members of positive peer groups. We can look to find God by participating in the community the members of peer groups that encourage our young adults to do good things for themselves and for others through positive peer pressure.

All members of a responsible peer group will discourage their current and newer members from drinking alcohol, smoking, using illegal drugs, and using firearms. Members of a peer group should encourage activities that contribute toward improving the quality of everyday living for all of the members of the peer group. A responsible peer group rejects behaviors, attitudes, and addictions that are destructive to the fellow members of the peer group as well as to the newer members that will be joining the peer group in the present and in the future.

A role model for the peer group would encourage constructive studying and the pursuit of academic excellence among the group's members. Role models work with their peers to find the right path to success in education, relationships, and in their relationships with God. Role models are mature and reject negative behaviors that are detrimental to the wellbeing of the members of the peer group. Role models help the members of the peer group to understand the difference between right and wrong.

Role models try to talk to the members of the peer group about the dangers of high-risk behaviors such as promiscuous sexual behaviors. Role models will help members of the peer group to understand the eventual dangers and consequences of engaging in high-risk and promiscuous sexual encounters. These mentors have to explain why sexually transmitted diseases exist. The mentors have to help our young adults to understand who is at risk to face infections of sexually transmitted diseases and who is safer from facing an infection from sexually transmitted diseases. Mentors would encourage high-risk young adults undergo sexually transmitted disease testing for both themselves and their partners before engaging in intimate sexual activity. Female young adults should receive family planning counseling from their doctors and therapists before making decisions about engaging in sexual activity while they are still undergraduates in high school or in college.

Mentors of peer groups encourage current members and new members to pursue their relationships with God. They encourage prayer, study, and communication with God. They encourage peer group members to try to follow the guidance of God in order to make our everyday lives happier and freer from conflict, pain, and suffering. Constructive peer groups have role models that are very willing to help their members to pursue a powerful relationship with God.

Peer groups should form support groups for young adult girls that are facing pressures from under aged dating, raging hormones, academic pressures, and peer pressure. Our schools and medical community should offer counseling services, medical treatment, and group counseling therapy to young adult girls that are at high risk to fall into an unplanned pregnancy, to turn to illegal drugs, or to suffer setbacks in their academic performance. We have to get our young adult girls the help that they need.

Young adult boys can also suffer from peer pressure, raging hormones, substance abuse curiosity, academic setbacks, and behavioral difficulties. It is always the goal of the mentors of peer groups to try to make sure that our young adult boys do not fall into incarceration in a juvenile detention facility or in a correctional facility. We have to offer high-risk young adult boys the help and guidance that they need in order to convince them to reject drugs, alcohol, smoking, and firearms. We have to get our young boys medical treatment when we first see signs that they might have a behavioral disorder. Psychiatrists and counselors in our schools must do anything and everything that is possible to save our young adult boys from self-destruction. Our young boys should also seek medical counseling if they want to engage in high-risk sexual behaviors. That counseling should make available counseling to all young boys that are unsure about what to do with their need to have intimacy outside of marriage. It should be find to discuss mutual sexually transmitted disease testing for a young adult boy and his partner before they decide to become sexually active. We have to give our young adult boys the counseling that they need in order to help them to mature into healthy adults.

Group therapy meetings and discussions can help peers to share their issues with each other and to try to receive feedback about how to approach and to solve their problems. Members of peer groups can have problems all of the time. These problems can range from relationship issues to substance abuse disasters. Group therapy is a peaceful setting where our young adults can interact with peers that have similar issues that they would address while they try to support each other. All grammar schools, high schools, and colleges should have peer group therapy services for those students that have problems that can cause life-threatening behavioral problems.

Mentors can help students that face discipline and disciplinary hearings to face rehabilitation by working on community service projects. These mentors can also bring students back into the community of students and their peer groups without feeling the shame and humiliation of their discipline. It is always the goal to help our student to understand what they have done wrong through constructive discipline. This type of discipline is meaningful in the way that it helps students without hurting the student. Mentors and school officials should not look to destroy a student's life after a student's mistake. The goal is to rehabilitate a student without trying to destroy a student's life.

Peers that have been involved in drugs and alcohol can speak before their fellow peers about how drugs are a one-way street to a total disaster. Mentors would portray students who are recovered substance abusers as role models because they would try to convince peers in our schools to reject street drugs and alcohol. Our students need to understand the consequences of using street drugs and alcohol by hearing how it destroys students who have been through the addiction and rehabilitation. This type of therapy would help our high-risk students to make the right choice by rejecting street drugs and alcohol.

Young adults that have been involved in gangs can talk to their peers about the dangers and consequences of gang life. They can talk about the arrests and the poverty. They can talk about their dead-end lifestyle. They can talk about the way that a gang has nothing ever to offer to any young adult boy or girl. High-risk students as well as other students would come to understand that they have to reject gang-life.

Top students would encourage their peers to take their studies seriously. They would talk about how to pursue the benefits of an education and to reject the idea that an education is not worth the effort or the time of peers in grammar schools, high schools, and colleges.

Pre-Engagement Issues and Young Adults

There comes a point in a young adult's life when he or she decides to have a relationship with a member of the opposite gender for the first time. The question is at what point is it necessary for a young adult to form a dating relationship with another young adult?

Many motivations are involved. Young adults in grammar school might want to experiment with dating members of the opposite gender. They might be responding to peer pressure to become interested in entering the dating scene. They might want to search for a wife or a husband so that they could get married right after graduation from high school. High school students may also be looking for a spouse in the future for marriage. College students would definitely want to graduate as engaged men or women. The right time to experiment with dating is when the young adult feels the need to find a spouse or a potential spouse for his or her life after graduation from school.

Young adults should receive family planning counseling and training for the first time in grammar school and in high school. They should learn about the mechanism of conception and childbirth. They should learn about the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases, including the high-risk behaviors that lead to the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases. They should learn about how birth control frustrates and cancels the process of conception. They should come to understand that a woman's body is God's Factory of Human Life. God is the Being that creates human life inside of a woman's body. Playing games with conception is playing games with God.

Is it appropriate for young adults to use contraception outside of marriage? We have to look at what motivates a young adult male and a young adult female to engage in sexual activity. What do they gain from the sexual activity if they do not want to work with God to conceive a human life? They are talking about five to ten minutes of passion. Are they exploiting each other for pleasure or a high from sexual activity? What is their sexual activity really seeking to accomplish if they do not want to have a child? Can sexual activity with birth control amount to the exploitation for a woman? Does it serve no purpose in a young adult woman's life? A woman has to think about what she has to gain from using birth control if she is going to try to get pregnant and to frustrate God's efforts to impregnate her at the same time.

Sexual activity between young adults can have benefits. They can start to experiment about how to conceive a human life and how to work with God if they have graduated from school or they are about to graduate from high school or college. They can be intimate with each other as a way of showing love for one another. They can consummate the relationship with each other as a way of finalizing their relationship with each other. They can begin to experiment and explore what sexual intimacy is about. They can practice intimacy so that they can try to work with God to conceive a human life in the future.

Sexual activity between young adults may also carry many consequences. A young adult girl may feel exploited if she uses birth control while engaging in sexual activity. She can become depressed when she finds out that she has not become pregnant every month. A relationship could just end and she would not be eligible for compensation since they would not be married or have kids. The end of a relationship that involves the abuse of birth control can cause pain and suffering for a woman for the rest of her life.

When is the best time to start to experience intimacy with your partner? Should the initial sexual encounter be a consummation attempt? A young adult boy and a young adult girl may be dating for a while before they will consider the possibility of engaging in sexual activity. They have to understand that sexual activity is a way to connect directly to God in order to work with Him to create a human life inside of a woman, which is God's Factory of Human Life. Women can become so desperate to keep their boyfriend that they will try to consummate the relationship by offering sexual encounters to their boyfriends. Sometimes, a young adult girl's sexual encounters serve to try to convince the man to marry her. That type of desperation can cause sexual activity to happen rather quickly in the relationship. Couples that are more realistic about the purpose of sexual activity might wait a little longer before trying to consummate the relationship. They may wait until they have agreed to become engaged to one another or even when they are formally married. All couples are different. However, premarital sexual activity usually serves to accomplish something other than a pregnancy. Sexual activity of this nature is unplanned and is spontaneous.

Young adult boys and girls sometimes do not understand how to use contraception at all. They cannot afford to buy the more expensive types of contraception. A young adult boy and a young adult girl may agree to engage in sexual activity out of nowhere. They may not know what they are doing. That could lead to an unplanned pregnancy.

The most important time to teach our young adults about contraception and birth control is when they are still virgins in both grammar schools and high schools. Should we encourage them to become sexually active when we teach them about various types of birth control? We need to develop family planning counseling programs for our young adults so that we can give them counseling about what the best time would be for them to engage in sexual activity for the first time and for times after that. They have to understand that they only need sexual activity if they need to conceive a human life. However, they should be able to discuss their relationship issues with a family planning counselor in grammar school, middle school, high school, and/or college.

Should a young adult boy require a young adult girlfriend to engage in sexual activity with him as a requirement before he will propose marriage to her? A young adult woman that is desperate to get married might just agree to engage in sexual activity with her boyfriend. A girlfriend that is in high school or a grammar school might offend her parents if they find out that she has been sexually active with her boyfriend because that is the only way that he will consider proposing to her. This could be especially painful if a grammar school or high school young adult girl would get pregnant before her boyfriend has proposed to her. What happens if an undergraduate young adult girl gets pregnant in college before her boyfriend has proposed marriage to her? It is a very dangerous situation when desperate girls try to entrap young adult men into marriage by giving them a sex life.

Young adult girls can feel deeply depressed, exploited, abused, and disgraced when a sexual relationship ends without a marriage proposal. It is a risk that all young adult girls that engage in sexual activity actually assume. There is always a chance that their boyfriend will not go through with the marriage proposal. This situation could lead to serious psychiatric problems for the young adult girl. That girl should seek psychiatric counseling when the end finally happens.

A young adult girl may take a while to recover from the end of a sexual relationship that did not produce a marriage proposal. Starting over means having the strength and the courage to start over again with another young adult boy. It means getting the medical treatment that she needs to help her to function after her devastating loss. It would be a task to recover from her devastating betrayal. Religious counseling and prayer may help her. Seeing a psychotherapist might also help her to recover. Sometimes, relationship failures can be a learning experience for women that can make them into stronger individuals in the future. We hope that young adult girls eventually recover from their suffering and will go on with their lives.

A young adult boy who has hurt his ex-girlfriend also has to recover from a relationship where he tried to have sexual activity without the intent to work with God and his girlfriend to conceive a human life inside of his ex-girlfriend's body, which is God's Factory of Human Life. Where do you meet someone to replace an ex-girlfriend? How do you start a new relationship? How do you apply the lessons that you have learned in a previous relationship to try to make a future relationship more successful? How do you stop the pain and suffering from happening again?

We should develop relationship-counseling services for all of our young adults in all of our schools. It is to the best interests of our peer communities to invest time and effort to help save the relationships of our young adult boys and young adult girls. We cannot just sit back and allow our students to hurt each other like this without doing everything that we can to save their relationships from failure.

The Department of Education should fund and sponsor support programs that would help naïve young adults that are reckless in relationships to understand reality. God does not want young adult boys to hurt young adult girls and vice versa. God wants His young boys and His young girls to have successful relationships that are free of suffering. Families, schools, and counselors have to work together to create and to maintain counseling programs that will help our young adults to avoid the reckless behaviors that cause pain and suffering in failed relationships.

Engagement Issues in Young Adults

Family Planning Issues

What is consummation? Consummation is an act of sexual intimacy that a young adult boy and a young adult girl will share as a way of bonding in a relationship. It is a way of sealing a contract between them that their relationship will last indefinitely.

This is different from a marital contract. A marital contract is an agreement that a man and a woman will work with God to conceive, to give birth, and to develop human lives together. God recognizes a married couple as a mechanism that gives him the ability to create life inside of a woman, which is God's Factory of Human Life. The creation of human life is God's purpose, goal, and passion. The creation and the development of human life are two things that make God the Supreme Being for all of us.

Does God recognize and support consummation outside of marriage or even outside of an engagement? When a young adult boy and a young adult girl begin to have sexual activity, God expects them to assume the responsibilities of parenthood. This is true whether they are married, engaged, or not married. Taunting God is having sexual relations with a partner of the opposite gender without any intent to work with God to conceive a human life with that partner.

Sexual intimacy between a man and a woman is a direct connection to God that acts as the mechanism that nature and that natural selection use to create and to develop human life. Why should there be any other purpose for sexual activity? That is true for unengaged couples, engaged couples, and married couples. Sexual activity without the intent to conceive serves no purpose even though God sometimes defeats the couple's birth control schemes and surprises them with an unplanned pregnancy.

Consummation can be very traumatic if the young adult boy and the young adult girl are both virgins. They would want to experience each other sexually as a way to show devotion to each other. Being naïve about dangers of unprotected sexual activity and the consequences of reckless sexual behaviors and activities come with being virgins.

Young adults that are not engaged to each other do not need to go through the stress of consummation. They can enjoy their relationship without worrying about birth control and unplanned pregnancies. They certainly do not want to flirt with the possibility of a transmission of a sexually transmitted disease.

Young adults that become engaged to each other after a marriage proposal do not really need consummation either. The strength of a relationship between a man and a woman has nothing to do with sexual activity that happens without the intent to conceive a human life. A premarital relationship has to do with members of a couple that enjoy quality time together and that dream of starting a family together in the future. There is no such thing as a young adult girl that has to submit to her boyfriend's sexual desires. Lust, the obsessive desire for sexual activity, is an emotion that promotes the exploitation of a person's partner in a sexual relationship. That is when a man and a woman succeed in hurting each other both physically and emotionally.

A young adult boy and a young adult girl might want to wait until they are married before they flirt with sexual activity. It is safer and less stressful for both partners. It is less exploitive of the other partner. It takes the stress of developing the relationship into a marriage away from the young adult boy and young adult girl.

It hurts both partners and God when a young adult boy and a young adult girl participate in sexual activity without the intent to conceive. We have to understand that we all answer to God. That is true of the way that we behave sexually. That is something that our young adults must understand. God will punish us if we offend him through our illegal sexual behaviors.

Young adult couples that are virgins should wait until after the wedding to deal with the stress of consummation and losing your virginity. It is less painful and less stressful. It is easier to work with God later when you would need to begin to build a family. You know that you are in love when both partners agree to this type of arrangement.

Issues that a husband and wife need to consider numerous family planning after marriage.

When would they be ready to conceive a human life? When will the time come for a husband and wife to work with God to create a new human life and to bring that life into the Human Family? God will reward us for positive sexual activity by giving us a child to develop into a toddler, into a child, into a young adult, and then into an adult. God expects all of us to work with Him to develop human life to work with him to create human life through productive and responsible sexual activity.

Does birth control hurt women? Have they conducted any studies about how women tend to tolerate birth control? Is birth control necessary in a relationship even if the husband and wife do not want to seek another child? Does the abuse of birth control contribute to the mutual decision by a husband and wife to file for divorce? Does birth control promote obesity and other health problems in women? What are the health benefits for birth control in women? What are the health benefits for birth control in men?

We need to conduct studies to understand the answers to these questions. Birth control gives us the idea that we can try to conceive a human life. We can stop the conception of life at the same time. Then we can feel satisfaction after we have gotten high on our sexual hormones. This is a great way of hurting God by telling him that we will not allow him to create a human life through the intimacy between a husband and a wife. There are many unanswered questions about birth control. We need to find the underlying cause of what birth control really does accomplish for married and unmarried couples.

All young adults should have access to financial planning courses in high schools and in colleges before they graduate and definitely before they become married. They should learn about balancing their budget, exploiting their credit cards responsibly, planning on saving for a home and/or an apartment responsibly, and understanding how to function within the economy with a spouse and with children. These types of courses should also be available online for couples that are struggling to understand what they are doing wrong with their finances.

It is one thing to date a future spouse over a period. It is another problem actually to live with that person for the first time. You then have to add in the living arrangements for the future babies. How much space will the new couple need for their new bundles of joy? Will they be able to tolerate each other when they are living together? Can they seek professional counseling if something goes wrong for them? It is a challenge for newlyweds to live with each other for the first time. That is really the time that is perfect for negotiating about intimacy.

Men should understand a woman's feminine issues before they start to live with a wife or a girlfriend. The menstrual cycle is a complicated process. Women can have mood swings at different points during this cycle. Husbands should encourage their wives to take vitamins, to eat healthy foods, not to smoke or not to drink alcohol, and to discuss their issues openly with their husband without feeling embarrassed. Exercise also helps to keep a husband and wife healthy.

Women should also try to understand male issues. Stress at work can cause a husband to have a bad attitude at home. A man could start to find reasons to end the marriage if certain problems go wrong. The abuse of birth control eventually can come back to haunt a couple that enters into a marital crisis. Substance abuse problems also can cause problems for the husband. A wife has to try to get her husband into counseling when she cannot understand his male issues. This is the most productive way to try to deal with the conflict between a husband and wife before it might cause a separation or a divorce. Women have to understand the male reproductive system and the mentality that leads men to hurt themselves and their wives by abusing their reproductive system.

Young adults have to understand why they are getting married. They have to discuss their goals with each other. How many kids do they want to have? What kind of jobs will they seek to attain? How much money will they think that they will make? Will they be living in an apartment or in a house? How long will they wait before they will have children? These are all questions that they will ask or should ask before the father walks his young daughter down the aisle.

The couple must be certain that their plans will be realistic and achievable. They must make sure that their plans after graduation will work. They will make sure that they will have the jobs that they have been seeking. They will make sure that they can afford their living arrangements. They will make sure that they can save money after they pay all of their bills. A young married couple has to be realistic about with they can achieve in a marriage.

Career Development Issues

There are numerous career issues that affect engaged couples while they are about to graduate from college or from graduate school. These issues can be detrimental to the development of their family life after their marriage.

A weak job market after graduation from college can completely frustrate students that will be graduating in the near future. It can be even more painful for engaged students to be facing problems in finding jobs that are right for them. It is important for the young couple to keep trying and to have faith that good jobs will appear for them at some point in the future. This crisis is particularly painful because it can cause a delay in the wedding day of the couple.

The Guaranteed Student Loan crisis is something that affects all college graduates. We all graduate with a debt from the time that we have been in college. Our creditors force us to pay them back after graduation. We have to factor this kind of debt into the equation when we have to calculate our budget after graduation. A weak job market can cause a college graduate to default on his or her GSL debt. That can be catastrophic for a marriage. The husband and wife have to be sure that they can be responsible for their GSL debts without facing a complete disaster.

All couples have to find a way to calculate their disposable income. That money that remains after the couple pays all of their bills. They have to find a budget that leaves them with a substantial amount of disposable income. That is the safest way to run a household. It becomes a tragedy when their level of disposable income is a negative amount. That means that they do not have enough money to pay their bills. We all have to understand these issues in order to maintain a stable household with children or without children.

A couple can do many things with their disposable income. The most productive way to use disposable income is to invest it in some type of investment fund. All major banks have financial advisors that can help you to make decisions about what to do with your disposable income. It is more productive to invest the money that to lock in a safe in your home. You may also find other uses for your disposable income. One of which is to pay off your credit card debts.

Should you use credit cards? We really do need to develop training and counseling programs in order to help people to understand what credit cards are and how they work. We also need to learn how they can malfunction in a way that could destroy our lives. Credit cards exist for a reason. A disaster that would force us to abuse our bank account with an unplanned withdrawal could cause us to default on our mortgage payment for the month. Sometimes it is beneficial to borrow money to buy things and then to pay off the debt later. Sometimes it is beneficial to use credit cards rather than cash when you buy things or when you make payments. The bottom line is that we need to be responsible with the way that we use our credit cards. We should use credit cards only when we are able to use them in responsible ways. That means that we can use our disposable income to pay them off repeatedly. That means that we will not max out our cards (that we will not charge to use up our total available credit). We should exceed the minimum payment every time that we make a payment on our credit card balance. Following these habits will make it less likely, that your credit cards will destroy your life and well-being.

We should have and use credit cards for several reasons. They give us the ability to buy things or to pay for services without forcing us to make a cash withdrawal from our bank account. You do not have to pay off the entire balance of what you have borrowed to deal with an emergency right away. You can make a complete payment to pay off your balance after a certain amount of time. Credit cards come in handy if you have an emergency in your home. You can use your credit card to replace your clothes washer if it is broken beyond repair without making a cash withdrawal from your bank account. Again, a withdrawal from your bank account can cause you to default on your payments and debts for the month. It is a good idea to have the security of credit cards on hand for emergencies.

Losing a job can be a catastrophe that can possibly destroy a marriage. A recession or a downturn in the economy can catch a couple off-guard. It is important to have faith in God and to look to God and the Holy Spirit for guidance and support when the unthinkable happens. We have to try hard to work with our spouse to have patience until the process of getting a new job is finished. God and the Holy Spirit help the good people to recover from the catastrophe of losing a job. We must remember that our oath on the wedding day calls for a husband and wife to have and do hold for better and for worse till death do you part. It is very important for a husband to be patient with a wife or a wife to be patient with a husband during a period of unemployment.

Some engaged couples graduate from college without jobs. Either the man and/or the woman cannot find a job after graduation from college. That is not a reason to give up on the relationship. They should keep trying to solve their problems until they can join each other in marriage after their job crises have been resolved. The love that an engaged man and an engaged woman have for each other should last for an eternity. God and the Holy Spirit will find a resolution to their problems eventually.

There comes a time when engaged couples cannot deal with the stress of their financial problems. It may get to a point where these problems could threaten to dissolve or to destroy their relationship. That may be the time to seek professional counseling. A marriage counselor can help the man and the woman to deal with the stress that is afflicting both of them. A counselor can help them to have patience with each other while they are trying to survive their economic crisis. There may be issues that they would want to discuss. These issues may relate to their engagement regarding intimacy and the conflict that has erupted between them. Sometimes professional counseling is a good step in the right direction for a struggling engaged couple. They have to do everything that they can do to save their relationship and their pending marriage.

It is time to seek psychological and psychiatric help when the stress of all of the couple's problems can threaten to destroy their relationship. It is fine for a couple to seek therapy and medical treatment before they graduate from high school or from college. Behavioral health specialists are there to help all struggling engaged and married couples.

Seeking Counseling

Sometimes it is helpful to a couple to receive family planning counseling from doctors and therapists. An engaged man and woman would benefit from understand the process of conception. That includes the menstrual cycle, sexual intercourse, conception of the ovum, the development of the fetus, and the childbirth. These counselors can explain exactly what happens in every step of the process of the creation of human life in God's Factory of Human Life.

Too many men do not know how the menstrual cycle operates. They do not know that there is only a five-day window when a woman can become pregnant every month. Women do not completely understand the male seed that reaches the ovum and turns it into the beginnings of a new human life. They can be more respectful to God, the ultimate Creator of Human Life, by understanding the process that will take place. They will have a new human life to develop at the end of the process, which will result in childbirth. Family planning counselors work with God and his married couples to fulfill His mission to create and to develop human life forever.

All banks have financial planning counselors that help numerous types of clients to understand what they can do with their disposable income. A financial counselor can help recent college graduates to plan a successful plan to buy a first home, to qualify for a home equity loan, and/or to begin to prepare for retirement. High school and college graduates should seek counseling from a financial advisor in order to have a good idea as to what their options are in order to use their disposable income in the best possible way.

All colleges and universities have career-planning services for their seniors. They can help graduating students with their resumes and with on-campus job fairs. They can also help students to apply for jobs through different online websites and career centers. Career counseling can help all college graduates to find jobs eventually. We all have to have faith that the economy will produce jobs for all of us.

A person should seek psychiatric counseling when there is evidence that the person is a threat to himself and/or a threat to others. Psychiatric intervention can also save a premarital relationship or a marital relationship from disintegrating. Sometimes, we can have medical conditions that could lead us to want to hurt ourselves and/or to hurt others. Psychiatrists and psychologists can work together to help us to recognize our illness as a psychiatric disorder and to find a medical treatment for it and to go for psychotherapy for it. Psychologists can help young adults that are engaged to survive conflict in their relationships. Psychiatrists can help young adults to calm down and to stop being a threat to themselves and to others.

Family and marriage counseling is for married couples that may or may not have children. Family and marriage counselors work with all members of a family that are facing problems that could cause the collapse of a family's marriage. Misbehaving kids can become high-risk candidates for substance abuse problems and criminal behaviors. The goal of family therapy and marriage counseling is to identify what is causing the problems in the family and in the marriage. They then want to find solutions to those problems so that the family members can stop hurting each other. Finally, they want to see an end to the conflict in the household and a family that lives peacefully within itself without life-threatening conflict. Many families need that type of support, guidance, evaluation, and therapy.

Marriage Issues in Young Adults

A newly married couple of young adults should try to think about a timetable about when they plan to try to conceive and to give birth to their children. The primary goal of all marriages is for the husband and wife to engage in intimacy with each other to connect with God in order to convince God to create a human life inside of the body of a the wife, which is the God's Factory of Human Life.

A couple must face many issues before they try to conceive with each other and while working with God. They have to understand the maturity that adults must have when they decide to raise a child. Adults must be ready to adopt a baby that has no ability to function. A baby needs twenty-four hours-a-day attention. The parents and siblings must teach a baby the basics of human life like speaking, eating, understanding the spoken language, and walking.

God and the Holy Spirit work with parents in the background to help them to develop their young babies and toddlers. God has an immediate relationship with every baby that He creates and that His doctors and parents bring into this world. God communicates with babies and toddlers in mysterious ways that stimulate their development rapidly after childbirth.

God and the Holy Spirit guide new parents and experienced parents in how to raise their children productively. Parents' children are also God's children. God brings his children into this world under the care of their parents for reasons that only God understands. God and the Holy Spirit exist in the background to help babies, toddlers, and parents to achieve success in the effort to develop human life after childbirth.

All newlywed couples would want to establish a timetable for intimacy. They should want to know when they would set aside time to show love for one another through intimacy. What is the ultimate goal of sexual intimacy? The ultimate goal of sexual intimacy is to work with God to conceive a human life. Can a woman that abuses birth control tolerate intimacy with her husband or partner without the intent to conceive for extended periods? Can the long-term use of birth control cause serious problems for a marriage? Would a woman rather live as a single mother rather than to live with a spouse or partner when she would have to tolerate the abuse of birth control?

We need to conduct studies to determine what the long-term issues are for women that seek to use contraception. These studies should focus in on the emotional and physical consequences of using birth control over extended periods. We should study the psychiatric, psychological, and physical issues that women confront with birth control.

A couple should set aside time for intimacy. They should establish goals for being intimate with one another. They have to make sure that they are not hurting each other with intimacy or with birth control. They have to understand the main reason why intimacy exists between a man and a woman. That is for a man and a woman to work with God to create a human life inside of God's Factory of Human Life in a woman's body.

All couples get into arguments. Conflicts within the relationships cause arguments. The couple should agree to try to resolve their issues in a constructive manner with little or no arguments. However, the couple should seek marriage counseling if their conflicts with each other seem to appear out of nowhere and threaten to cause an end to their relationship. A husband and wife should handle disagreements in a peaceful manner so they can resolve their differences without anger and/or hostility.

Many factors cause a breakdown in a marriage. Husbands and wives can behave in ways that are detrimental to their relationships. We should look at some of the stressors that can seek to end a relationship.

A man sometimes wants to give his wife an excuse to divorce him. One way that a husband does that is by cheating on his wife through what we call infidelity. The husband tries to start an extra-marital relationship with another woman. He decides to have sexual activity with the woman or mistress, without the intent to conceive a human life. A husband that behaves as this hopes that it will eventually cause his wife to ask for a separation and for a divorce. However, a husband and wife sometimes reconcile and survive infidelity. A husband sometimes has second thoughts about living apart from his wife. A wife sometimes does not want to lose the father of her children. The couple should seek marriage counseling if they want to save their marriage. They can opt for divorce if that is really what the husband wants and shows by his affair and infidelity.

Substance abuse puts an unbearable stress on a family and on a marriage. There are different types of substance abuse. The abuse of alcohol is something that can cause a marriage to collapse. Some men and some women can become obsessed with drinking alcohol. Alcohol abuse is a dead end that can cause a spouse to lose his or her job and marriage. Abusing illegal street drugs can lead to joblessness, divorce, and prison time. The spouse who abuses these controlled substances can seek rehabilitation and substance abuse counseling in an effort to save his or her job, marriage, and family as well as to stay out of prison.

It is never a good idea to bring your stress at work to home with you or to bring your personal problems to work with you. The fear of losing a job can deeply trouble a relationship between a husband and wife. Coming home from a situation at work where they have threatened you with termination or with other types of disciplines or threats can make a husband or wife very depressed and hyperactive. This can cause a husband or wife to develop a bad attitude toward his or her spouse. This could put a real strain on the relationship if it continues of a prolonged period. The couple might want to seek psychiatric counseling if the stress of work may be causing antisocial behaviors and detachment between the husband and wife in their marriage.

There are times when a woman will marry a man that suffers from psychiatric disorders or behavioral disorders. Sometimes a man might marry a woman that may have psychiatric problems and/or behavioral disorders. Social detachment is the main consequence of suffering with a psychiatric disorder. A husband may seek to become detached from his wife because of untreated psychiatric problems. A wife may want to spend long periods by herself because her psychiatric issues cause her to seek detachment from her spouse. Social detachment can destroy a marriage. It is important that a couple would seek psychiatric counseling when a psychiatric disorder causes a couple to suffer with social detachment.

We live in a society that encourages all of us to abuse birth control. We teach women to submit to men when it comes to birth control. We mostly do not care about how birth control can hurt a woman and God. Sexual intimacy without the intent to conceive a human life defeats the very purpose of sexual intimacy. Sexual intimacy is supposed to help us to work with God to create a human life. Trying to stop that from happening while we are trying to get that to happen is self-defeating. Does sexual intimacy hurt women when they abuse birth control? We need to conduct studies to find out the truth about the way that women really feel about these issues.

Financial problems can ruin a relationship. A spouse that is laid off from his or her job can cause the household to default on rent or mortgage payments. Prolonged unemployment can lead a couple to seek a divorce because of their inability to manage their finances effectively. It is important for a couple to be patient through a financial crisis and to show love for each other and for their kids by trying to stay together and to weather out the storm.

All couples need to seek marital and family counseling at some point. A husband and wife that care about each other and that care about their kids would want to confront their problems in therapy before they give up trying and file for divorce. A lack of marital counseling can cause a broken marriage to just end in separation and divorce. It is important for families to seek professional psychiatric and psychological help when they are in danger of separating or of filing for divorce.

Some parents actually develop psychiatric disorders after childbirth. It is so important to understand that it is not appropriate to give up on a spouse that has the symptoms of mental illness after childbirth. A spouse has to support his or her partner by getting him or her psychiatric treatment and psychological counseling. A birth of a child can be the greatest event in our lives. It can also be the most traumatic event in our lives. We need to seek medical treatment when childbirth is a severe trauma for either the wife or the husband.

Untreated psychiatric disorders can devastate a family and a marriage. These disorders can cause domestic violence, academic difficulties, and substance abuse problems. Violence and self-destructive behaviors can happen when mentally ill family members do not receive the medical treatment that they need when they develop psychiatric disorders. It is so important that a husband and wife seek psychiatric treatment for themselves and their kids before the worst happens.

Parental stressors can take their toll on both the mother and the father. Working irregular hours and dealing with the needs of multiple children can put severe burdens on a father and mother. They may want to seek daycare services for their kids to relieve some of their stress. The parents can try to develop coping mechanisms to help them to deal with their marriage and their kids. Parents can challenge young kids to take higher levels for themselves and for their siblings. Parenting is a gift from God. However, it can also be a challenge that can test us to our very limits.

Unfortunately, some children are born with disabilities. Raising a child with a disability can be a hardship. However, parents must show love, patience, and affection for their children regardless of what medical problems they have been born with. It is more stressful to care for a child that has a disability. We should hope that the federal government would develop support and assistance programs to help the parents of children with disabilities to care for their children and to make the most of the children's lives.

Parental Issues for Young Adults

The Baby Development Syndrome

How a baby learns to talk is a mystery to all of us. However, God has a relationship with every baby that is born. God guides a baby to develop the capacity to communicate with its parents, siblings, family members, and other persons. Does God help the parents of a baby to teach a baby how to speak and to understand the spoken language? The answer is probably yes. God and the Holy Spirit play a very active role in developing and teaching a baby to talk, to eat, to communicate, and to digest food. God helps a baby to explore his or her surroundings and to understand what exists in his or her surroundings.

God and the Holy Spirit guide parents when the time to teach the baby how to walk. God contributes to the development of a baby's body to a point where the baby has the aptitude to walk on his or her two feet. God will help parents to show patience as they guide a baby to become a toddler by teaching him or her how to walk.

God makes sure that a baby will digest food properly after childbirth. Learning how to talk and to communicate with parents, siblings, and others comes before potty training. God gets involved in teaching a baby and/or a toddler to begin to understand his or her digestive system. God helps the toddler to understand when his or her digestive system or his or her bladder are asking him or her to go to the bathroom. God trains toddlers to understand the signals from the bladder. God helps toddlers understand the messages that he or she receives from the large intestine and the rectum. These organs send a message to the brain when it is time to have a bowel movement or to pass urine. Parents do not know that God exists in the background to help them to teach their babies and toddlers about these basic issues.

Babies are born in a state of helplessness. A baby cannot do anything by himself or herself. Babies need round-the-clock, 24/7 attention. However, they do not just receive attention from their parents or guardians. They also receive attention from God and the Holy Spirit. God helps babies to perform the most basic functions of human life. Parents also have relationships with God and with the Holy Spirit. Parents also depend on guidance from God and the Holy Spirit to help them to cope with helping a helpless baby to begin to function as a toddler. God lives within every family of a newborn baby. God and the Holy Spirit are always there to assist families with babies and with toddlers regardless of whether the family members know it or not.

How do parents discipline toddlers in a way that is constructive? It depends on what the toddler is doing wrong. The toddler wants to do anything that he or she wants some of the time. Sometimes toddlers forget that they answer to their parents. They do things that test their parents' patience. Parents have to teach their toddlers the difference between right and wrong without inflicting physical and/or emotional harm upon the child. God also helps parents to discipline their children. God guides our toddlers. God and the Holy Spirit have an interest in helping parents to teach toddlers the difference between right and wrong in a way that will not hurt them. Parents do not always recognize the help that God and the Holy Spirit give them in the way that they discipline their toddlers.

When does a baby stop drinking formula and starts eating solid food? Every baby is different. Every parent is different. God's guidance in the background can help parents to make the right decisions about a baby's diet and about a toddler's diet. A pediatrician can also guide parents who need to make decisions about their children's eating habits. Parents are always frightened to feed solid food to a baby for the first time. However, a baby starts to digest solid food when he or she is supposed to digest solid food. Parents work with God to make decisions about a baby's diet.

All babies and toddlers have hygiene issues. Obviously, parents have to change their baby's diapers regularly. Babies and toddlers need to bathe every day. When do they start to brush their teeth? When do they start to learn how to bathe themselves? When do they learn the purpose of good hygiene? Should we train toddlers to manage their own hygiene so that they can manage their hygiene by the time that they reach grammar-school age?

Parent's relationships with God have a big say in how to prepare a toddler to manage his or her hygiene needs in the future. Some toddlers can assume those responsibilities in childhood sooner than others can. However, it does not hurt toddlers to teach them about how to maintain good hygiene habits from the time that they are in preschool.

The Social Development Syndrome

Daycare socialization is an excellent way to stimulate the social development of young toddlers. Daycare workers can help to teach young toddlers to learn valuable social skills that can help them to be sociable with each other and with adults in the present and in the future. God works with our toddlers in a daycare setting by motivating and stimulating them to understand the social skills that they will need to progress with their education and with their destiny from God. God and the Holy Spirit are invisible forces in a daycare center that teach children how to be part of a community of young human beings that are kind, considerate, and loving toward their fellow kids as well as to their adult mentors.

Young toddlers are very fortunate when they can experience peer interaction at the earliest possible age. It is a good idea for toddlers to understand how to maintain healthy peer interactions and relationships. Healthy social skills and a good attitude toward peers are essential traits to help our children to succeed in grammar school. Our kids should be learning these skills from the time that they are young toddlers when they are as young as one to two years old.

When do parents stop pushing a baby or a toddler in a stroller and start challenging the toddler to walk under his or her own power? How do parents know when a toddler has actually grown to be too mature for parents to push him or her around in a stroller? Do mothers cry when a baby is not a baby anymore but is now a functioning toddler? We call this the "Stroller Effect." Most toddlers would benefit from the exercise of walking everywhere that they would go. Are some toddlers too weak to walk without the help of a stroller? Parents should not subject a toddler to a stroller for a longer time than they need to do it. The exercise of walking is an excellent activity for young toddlers.

When do parents know that it is time for them to take off the training wheels of their toddler's bicycle? How long would a toddler have to be riding his or her bicycle until they are ready to take the next step to ride it without training wheels? Do parents feel terror when they come to a point when they have to take training wheels off a toddler's bike?

We call this catastrophe "The Training Wheel Panic Disorder." A disorder causes parents to lose their ability to sleep when they know that their toddler is now riding a bike without training wheels for the rest of their lives. God and the Holy Spirit are in the background to help parents to make the right decisions about training their kids to ride a bike without training wheels without having a complete nervous breakdown. Kids get used to riding their bikes without training wheels at some point. The parents' anxiety eventually ends.

When are kids responsible enough to know how to cross the street by themselves? How do parents teach their toddlers to cross the street so that they can do that responsibly when they get older? What happens when a kid demands that he or she should have the right to cross the street by himself or herself?

We call this situation “The Cross-The-Street Terror Alert.” Every parent fears the worst for their sons and daughters when they have permission to cross the street without supervision. Parents have to remember that God watches over all of His children. God does not just allow accidents to happen to His kids. Parents have to have faith in their kids to be responsible when they cross the street without supervision, as they get older. We also have to understand that God and the Holy Spirit will always try to keep our kids from facing life-threatening injuries. Crossing the street is an essential skill that kids have to learn as part of the maturation. God works with parents to help them to understand when the ideal time exists for the kids to learn the skills that are associated with crossing the street by themselves.

Are a child’s peers good for him or her or bad for him or her? How do parents know whether a child’s peer, a new best friend, will be good for him or her or bad for him or her? How do parents pass judgement on a child’s newfound friends? When do parents have to decide when a child’s friend is either acceptable or unacceptable? When do parents have to draw the line with a child’s friend that might be a troublemaker?

Authorizing a child to have peer relations is a very stressful event for parents. Kids can reach a certain point when they would really benefit from relationships with peers. This would be beneficial to their social development and to their development as members of Humanity. It is not easy to judge a young child in the first grade as being a bad influence on a son or daughter as it might be later in the upper grades. God and the Holy Spirit do not like it when peer groups collapse and when parents destroy peer relations in grammar school. Kids are not supposed to do evil and antisocial things in grammar school that would warrant the end of their social networks.

Parents have to be careful not to destroy peer relationships for an unjustifiable reason. They have to make sure that their kids can exist in healthy social and peer networks. Parents should only try to pull their kids out of those peer groups when they have indisputable evidence that the peer group is conspiring to commit crimes or to encouraging its members to self-destructive things.

How do parents motivate a toddler to be active instead of wanting to spend all of his or her free time in front of the television watching TV shows? Some toddlers like to sit around and to watch TV. Watching television may expose some toddler to shows that might not be appropriate for them. TV shows that advocate violence, drinking alcohol, and the use of weapons may be unsuitable for toddlers. Toddlers must find a balance between watching TV and engaging in constructive social activities. Video games that promote violence, death, and destruction are not appropriate for toddlers and young children. We call this “The Couch Potato Syndrome.” We have to make sure that what our toddlers and kids are watching is appropriate for them. Secondly, we must make sure that toddlers and children exist in balance between constructive social activity, school activity, and watching television.

Do parents panic when it is their child's first day of school in Kindergarten? Do kids know what to expect from their first day in school? Do kids have a nervous breakdown during their first day of school? What is the terror of the first day of school for our young kids?

It is important for parents to help kids to understand what will happen on their first day of school. Parents should prepare kids for what the teachers will expect them to do in the classroom. Parents should calm down a student's anxieties and fears. A parent can give a child a good pep talk in the schoolyard before the kids would be ready to go into class.

Teachers also have to try to take the anxiety away from first-time students. Teachers should treat their students with kindness, compassion, and understanding. The teachers have to do everything that they can to help their students to feel comfortable in the classroom, as the teacher will challenge them to learn the basic skills of reading and math.

"The First Day of School Anxiety Attack" should only last for a few minutes. It should be clear sailing for our parents, educators, and students after classes begin.

When is it appropriate for parents to teach their toddlers how to pray? Parents should teach their kids how to pray from the time that they can talk and to communicate with others. Parents should teach their toddlers to communicate with God through prayer. Toddlers should grow to respect their relationship with God and the power of God.

God plays a significant role in the lives of all of our toddlers. It is important for parents to teach their kids how to respond to God's help and His presence in their lives by teaching them how to pray. Parents should encourage their toddlers to pray at least once a day. Part of stimulating the healthy development of toddlers is to introduce them to their relationship with God. God has an easier time when he wants to help students who pray to Him.

It is important to find ways to discipline children in ways that will contribute to their healthy social and academic development. Educators and parents should not seek to injure a child because of misbehavior. Constructive discipline can send a strong-enough message to the child without subjecting him or her to humiliation, pain, and suffering.

School is a learning experience. School is not just about learning about academic topics. School is also about learning the difference between right and wrong. School is about learning from your mistakes. School is about finding a way to find God in our lives. School is not about hurting, injuring, humiliating, and/or destroying students that make errors in their judgement and behaviors.

Educators do not need to injure children when they make a mistake. Educators must find constructive ways to correct and to modify a child's behavior so that the child will not disintegrate in school. Educators should follow the guidance of God when they are dealing with developing constructive ways to discipline young children.

Educators must find ways to work with parents to offer rewards and incentives to help students to be motivated to succeed in their studies in all of their schooling. We should reward students for their effort and for their achievement. We should motivate students to achieve success in schools by giving them goals to achieve, rewards to win, and prestigious recognitions to gain.

Issues between Young Adults and God

How Young Adults Deal with Their Sexual Behaviors

Some young adults believe that it is appropriate to abuse birth control in order to prevent a pregnancy during intimacy. It is important to understand that sexual intimacy between a man and a woman is a direct connection to God that is supposed to convince God to create a human life inside of a woman. Contraception frustrates God during sexual intimacy between a man and a woman by making it very difficult to conceive a human life. This situation very much hurts God. God creates all human life inside of a woman's body. God feels very hurt and depressed when birth control between a man and a woman who are sharing intimacy cannot produce a human life. God wants all of our young adults to understand the main purpose of sexual intimacy. God also wants young adults to understand how they can hurt Him through their reckless sexual behaviors.

An unplanned pregnancy is the most is one of the most serious consequences of engaging in sexual activity without the intent to conceive a human life in cooperation with God. God can become angry with a couple that feels the need to engage in sexual relations with not intent to work with God to create a human life. God can retaliate against them by causing the woman in the relationship to become pregnant. The couple can further escalate their conflict with God by threatening to end the pregnancy through an abortion. A woman's body is God's factory of human life. We have no right to destroy God's efforts to create a human life inside of a woman just because we wanted some type of a rush of pleasure from sexual activity. We do not have the right to destroy the beginnings of human life that God will create inside of His Factory of Human Life inside of a woman.

God has ways to punish us for engaging in high-risk sexual behaviors. God is very upset when his young adults engage in promiscuous sexual encounters with people that they do not know. Young adults that have numerous sexual partners offend God. Abusing birth control with numerous partners gets God very angry. That is why sexually transmitted diseases exist. God punishes us for engaging in offensive sexual behaviors. God will arrange for an encounter with someone that will infect us with a sexually transmitted disease if we persist in abusing our reproductive system with multiple partners while doing street drugs with no intent to conceive a human life. It is important to remember that all of us answer to God with our sexual behaviors.

God does not appreciate it when young adult men and women molest, sodomize, and rape each other. We can define rape as any type of sexual activity that happens between two partners that have known each other for less than a few days. It is offensive and can carry grave consequences. Engaging in rape can lead to the transmission of a sexually transmitted disease, emotional trauma, and physical injuries. The couple does not have to engage in intercourse in order for us to classify their encounter as rape. Molestation, sodomy, and a mutual exchange of body fluids can constitute rape.

Young adults do not understand the pain that we feel when we have sexual activity without the intent to conceive human life. It hurts partner, our God, and us. We have to ask ourselves what we have to gain from sexual activity without the intent to conceive a human life. It might be good for some people and bad for others. We have to conduct studies to determine what is really going on.

Substance Abuse Problems

God does not endorse the use of tobacco among young adults. God does not like it when our young adults face peer pressure to abuse tobacco. That is especially true when adults encourage young adults to abuse tobacco. Our young adults can offend God by abusing tobacco. Tobacco causes hygiene problems as well as other health problems. God will always discourage young adults from experimenting with tobacco.

God knows that peer pressure can attack our young adults to convince them to abuse alcohol. Abusing alcohol is a self-destructive habit. God cannot tolerate pressure that falls upon young adults to use alcohol. There is no such thing as drinking alcohol responsibly. Alcohol hurts our young adults regardless of whether they try to drink it responsibly or not. God is offended when television commercials and peer pressure in schools and dorms encourage our young adults to hurt themselves with alcohol. We must work with God to help our young adults to understand the dangers and the dead end street that await them when it comes to abusing alcohol.

God does not tolerate illegal narcotic street drugs. Our young adults should know better than to get involved with illegal drugs. God tries to help all of our young adults to understand the dangers and consequences of using illegal street drugs. God and the Holy Spirit work together to get our young adults help when they make the mistake of abusing street drugs for the first time. God feels pain when He loses a young adult to street drugs. God and the Holy Spirit work in the background to save the lives of young adults that have been lost or damaged because of encounters with illegal street drugs.

Agnosticism

Young adults sometimes ignore the existence of God. God plays a role in all of our lives. God tries to reach all of our young adults. God is there to help them. God appreciates it when they recognize His existence and when they make a strong effort to reach Him through prayer. Young adults cannot ignore God because of the consequences that may follow in their future.

Young adults can make family planning decisions without having consideration for how God feels about their decisions. Young adults that have a healthy relationship with God will feel His guidance when they begin the process of intimacy with their partner. That means that the partners will engage in intimacy that is responsible and productive. Young adults that do not understand the role that God plays in their intimacy with one another can make mistakes that could hurt God, damage their relationship, and that can cause them to hurt each other. Young adults must understand that God is always involved in intimacy between young adults. Young adults cannot ignore God during a plan for intimacy.

Young adults that ignore God do not go to Him and to the Holy Spirit to get help with their problems. This very much hurts God and the Holy Spirit. God and the Holy Spirit love all of us. They want to help us in our time of need. They have problems reaching us if we tend to ignore them. That is a very sad story for God and all of us that would benefit from His intervention and help and would reject them because we do not want anything to do with God and the Holy Spirit. This type of detachment can have very serious consequences when we God has to leave us by ourselves to deal with our problems.

Some of us have the idea that we can get away with any sin, crime, and/or effort to hurt ourselves or to hurt others. This is especially true when we have the ability to ignore God. However, God will punish us for wither hurting ourselves and/or for hurting others regardless of whether we want to think about His existence or not. The Holy Spirit will catch us doing something that is illegal and will bring us to justice for what we have been doing wrong. Individuals that are detached from God and from the Holy Spirit eventually make one final mistake that can cause God to eject them from His Human Family.

It is very difficult to ignore the existence of God during an effort between a young adult man and a young adult woman to conceive a human life. Some couples think that they can ignore God during the process of conception and childbirth. This also deeply hurts God. God and the Holy Spirit do everything that they can to help parents of newborn children to cope with their stressors. Parents should pray and recognize the existence of a Higher Power in their lives. Ignoring God's presence in a parent's life can cause his or her family eventually to fail. A successful marriage and a success family with children depend on a strong recognition of the presence of God in the parents and children's lives.

Academic Behaviors

God and the Holy Spirit expect all of our young adults to make a strong effort to perform in our schools. God and the Holy Spirit try hard to guide our students both in the classroom and outside of the school. God and the Holy Spirit guide all of us in our studies throughout our school years.

Young adults feel the love and guidance of God. God helps young adults to prepare to fulfill their destinies and to find and execute the plan that God has chosen for each of them. God has a destiny and a plan for all of our young adults. God guides them through their academic activities to achieve what God wants them to achieve.

God feels pain when our students face disciplinary action in our schools. God feels pain when our students run into problems in their studies and with their behaviors inside and outside of the classroom. God and the Holy Spirit want to be there for our kids and young adults through the best times of their lives and through the worst times of their lives. God wants to help our students to achieve the best results possible through every crisis that they could face.

God would want students to be eligible for psychiatric treatment, psychotherapy, tutoring, community service, family planning counseling, and criminal justice counseling. These programs would help God to help our young adults to overcome their obstacles to being successful students.

God expects all of our students to behave in respectful ways toward their peers and the adults that will guide them through their academic programs. Our relationships with God stimulate social behaviors, academic success, and successful relationships with our peers and with our loved ones.

God sets certain standards not only for our young adult students, but also for our educators as well. God cares about educators that are responsible for making sure that our students meet the requirements of their coursework. God works with our teachers and our students to achieve success in school. This is true even though teachers and students do not necessarily notice God's presence in the background.

God expects the behaviors of young adult students to be respectful to the community of students in their schools and to their community outside of their schools. God and the Holy Spirit guide all students to be respectful to each other and to other members of their communities. God does not tolerate antisocial behaviors among students either in schools or outside of schools.

God is there to help our students to achieve the academic success that they will need to achieve their destiny and to find their God-Given purpose for being part of the Human Community. It is God's goal to make sure that He can use all of His human resources to develop successfully all young adults into successful members of society and God Human Family.

Work Ethics

God and the Holy Spirit do not want our young adults to report to either work or school while under the influence of tobacco, illegal street drugs, and/or alcohol. Our educators have to make it perfectly clear that these are extremely harmful substances. We should teach our young adults to reject television advertising and peer pressure that encourage them to abuse alcohol. This is especially true when our young adults are in high school and in college.

The Holy Spirit would like to condemn the abuse of illegal street drugs in schools and at work. There is no excuse for using street drugs in a college dorm, in a college party, at work, or outside of work. Educators must work with God and the Holy Spirit to develop Criminal Justice Training to help our kids to understand their need to reject illegal street drugs. Courses that require training in the dangers of drugs and the reasons why young adults should reject drugs should be required in all high schools and colleges.

There is a lot of peer pressure that encourages our young adults to abuse tobacco. This harmful habit can lead to life-threatening medical conditions. God and the Holy Spirit would do anything to try to convince our kids not even to try to smoke tobacco. We should teach our students to reject peer pressure that encourages them to begin smoking in the first place.

Drinking alcohol, smoking, and/or using street drugs are completely incompatible with today's workplaces. Our young adults should understand that before graduation. Our students should look to the guidance of God and the Holy Spirit so they can make the responsible decisions to reject alcohol, street drugs, and tobacco.

God expects young adults to behave in a respectful manner in the workplace. Our young adults can look to God and to the Holy Spirit for guidance so that they can have help in performing their jobs properly. A strong relationship with God means that a young adult will be very sociable and cooperative with his or her colleagues at work.

God helps young adults that are married or engaged to start a family after graduating from college by guiding them to exhibit excellent job performance at work. This is the first step toward working with God toward the goal of conceiving, giving birth to, and developing new human lives.

The ultimate goal of God and the Holy Spirit is for young adult graduates of high schools or colleges is to have a successful career, and successful marriage, and successful a successful family life. That helps God to achieve His mission to conceive and to develop human repeatedly forever.

We have to remove the obstacles and the conflicts that God faces when He is not completely successful in developing human life for various reasons such as criminal behaviors, behavioral disorders, and/or infertility among young adults and adults.

We all work with God and the Holy Spirit to achieve a successful career and a successful family life.

Final Statement

God and the Holy Spirit love, guide, and work with all of our young adults. There are times when God and the Holy Spirit are guiding our young adults without anyone noticing them.

The Holy Spirit has all of our young adults under surveillance. The Holy Spirit knows everything that we do in our lives. The Holy Spirit rewards us for our accomplishments and good deeds and punishes us for our crimes and harmful intentions. The Holy Spirit is part of God. It helps God to watch over Humanity and to deal with Humanity's problems.

Our young adults have to answer to God and to the Holy Spirit. They will be rewarded if they have faith that a higher power such as God and/or the Holy Spirit. They will punish our young adults if they proceed to exist with a detachment from God and the Holy Spirit that leads them to believe that they can commit crimes without facing the consequences of the punishment of God and the Criminal Justice System.

We are all part of God. Our young adults are part of God. Our young adults answer to God. They have to understand that whether they exist in a public school or in a private religious school. They have to know that God is there to love them and to care for them. They need to understand that they need God to guide them.

They also need to understand the consequences of ignoring God and being hurtful to themselves and to others at the same time. Their punishment can be very severe. It is important to allow students to have different ways to find God through religion and science. It is important to encourage young students to pray and to talk to God about their issues. It is important for young adults to understand the benefits of having a strong relationship with God and the consequences of ignoring God.

God is the most complex living entity that we will ever face. We need to understand each other and ourselves before we can understand the role that God plays in our lives. Young adults should be on a mission to understand how God shapes their lives. Young adults should have their own personal ways to find God through religion and through science. They should also find God through their own personal relationship with God.

We should all pray that all of our young adults will someday find God and that they will stop their self-destructive and destructive behaviors. We hope to be looking at an era when God and the Holy Spirit will save the lives of each one of our young adults. Someday, our young adults will reject firearms, tobacco, alcohol, illegal street drugs, and high-risk sexual behaviors. This is what God wants. This is what God will receive from our kids. We all hope that God will achieve these goals as soon as is humanly possible.

Yes, so many of our young adults are in trouble. We must be there to love them, to care for them, and to save their lives. We must form a partnership with God and with the Holy Spirit with a mission to put an end to the hardships of our young adults through intervention programs that will help us to save their lives. We ask God to bless all of our young adults and to help us to help them as much as we can.